
I really enjoyed the trial. It was a cool idea to learn how to argue and speak freely while also expanding your knowledge about climate change. I thought it was the perfect conclusion to the topic covered this semester.

I really enjoyed the trial. It was a great project. It was new for me to see exactly how a court case works.

I thought it was really good. The most difficult part was working out which questions to ask and which witnesses to choose. Overall, I liked the creative part of the exercise the most and getting to rebut the other side's arguments was really fun :)

The way we did this role play in English class was something I had never done before. In retrospect, I am very positive about doing something like this again, especially in the context of having to write a speech, as it was an educational, interesting and fun way to approach it.

I really enjoyed the role play. I liked that we were in two large groups and were able to communicate during the trial (with our witnesses). The Earth was a bit complicated to defend, but that was the fun part (for me) because we had a challenge, we learned a lot about the topic, the different aspects and arguments.
